

POLISH VIOLINIST IN DELIGHTFUL PROGRAM

Paul Kochanski Proves His Technical Skill by Giving Variety of Numbers to Satisfaction of Audience.

By LEE SOMERS.
ONE does not ordinarily expect a concert to be 100 per cent entertainment. One goes to a concert, ordinarily, expecting to be interested, amazed at the dexterity of the artist, delighted with his virtuosity, but not necessarily at all times pleased with the subject matter, the music itself.

There is, then, every reason for those who heard Paul Kochanski, the distinguished Polish violinist, at the National Theater yesterday on the occasion of his fifth appearance in this city, to congratulate themselves. Rarely has a more uniformly pleasing program been presented here.

Mr. Kochanski, though his technical skill is great, did not select numbers that make an audience gasp with amazement that they are played at all. Instead, he chose works that almost any audience would be glad to hear.

The advance announcement of his program was sufficient in itself to create pleasant anticipation. The realization more than surpassed expectations. From the Cesar Franck Sonata, with which Mr. Kochanski began, to his final encore, it is safe to say that the audience found every moment enjoyable.

The Sonata's four movements—allegretto, ben moderato, allegro, recitativo-fantasia, allegretto poco mosso—presented a wonderful succession of new beauties, and here especially Mr. Kochanski was admirably assisted by his capable accompanist, Walter Golde.

The Wienawski Concerto in D Minor came next, and its final movement, with its gypsy swing, won a splendidly enthusiastic welcome.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Hymn to the Sun," Dvorak's Slavonic Dance, and Schubert's beautiful "Rosamunda," as arranged by Kreisler, followed, with Kreisler's own "Gitanes," admirably demonstrating the possibilities for beauty of a syncretized rhythm, closing this series. The popular "Song of India," by Rimsky-Korsakoff, was played as an encore.

The final numbers were Tchaikovsky's "Chanson Sans Paroles" and Paganini's "La Campanella," with Kreisler's "Caprice Viennois" as an encore.

From the presence on the program of so many selections frequently played by Kreisler, it would appear that Kochanski is lavishing comparison with this great master of the violin. Moreover, since Kochanski's visit is so recent, one is tempted to draw conclusions as to the quality of Kochanski as well. Perhaps it is better not to attempt too much.

All three are great artists, but they are individuals as well. Kochanski, for example, plays the "Chanson d'Inde" pianissimo, and with wonderful feeling; but there are no doubt many who would prefer Kreisler's firmer definition. Kochanski's mastery was demonstrated particularly in the intricacies of the Sonata and of the "Chanson Sans Paroles," but his program did not present the spectacular in violin-playing to the same degree that it was offered in Kochanski's numbers, all brilliance and fire, perhaps, but intrinsically much less melodious and delightful than the selections yesterday.

There are many who feel that Kochanski will ultimately succeed Kreisler. In any event, one may count with considerable certainty on hearing him again, a program that will be as able, if not as brilliant, as the one he rendered the city a service in bringing him here this season.

Late Newspaper Man Leaves $180,000 Estate

Whitman Osgood, publicity expert and one-time city editor of The Washington Times, who died November 24, left an estate valued at about $180,000 according to the petition for letters testamentary filed yesterday in Probate Court by Mrs. Thalia P. Osgood, the widow.

The will makes no provision for a former wife, the will declares, she took her share of the estate under an agreement before the divorce. No provision is made for the daughter, Rose, "because she has all that she will need or can desire."

The son, James W. Osgood, is bequeathed but $5. The remaining estate is devised to the widow who is named executrix.

She was driving through Cambridge the night in question. The sheriff was standing desolately in the road, watching the tail light of a car ahead that was rapidly dimming.

"There he goes," lamented the sheriff.

"Let's get after him," said Miss Andrews.

In jumped the sheriff, and with the sixteen-year-old girl at the wheel they sped after the fugitive. He was almost to the State line before they overtook him. Miss Andrews drove the car in front of him and finally forced him into the ditch. Then she brought the bandit back in her car, while the sheriff followed with the car that had been used by the robber. It is not on record that the desperado made the least effort to escape.

It was in 1919 that Miss Andrews made her debut on Broadway. Parental objections cut short this episode, too, Miss Andrews says.

FOILED IN POLITICS, RETURNS TO STAGE

Mrs. Helene Andrews, of Maryland, Signs With Fred Stone in "Tip Top."

Her aspirations to a political office frustrated by family objections, Mrs. Helene Andrews, wife of former Representative William N. Andrews, of Maryland, well-known in Washington society, is going back to the stage.

Mrs. Andrews—she, however, prefers the title of Miss—made the announcement of her return to the stage yesterday in Baltimore on her return from New York, where, she says, she signed a contract to play with Fred Stone in "Tip Top."

The announcement recalls the fact that during one of the campaigns engaged in by her father, Edward S. Phillips, former sheriff at Cambridge, Md., she accompanied him on all of his speaking tours even taking the stump for him on numerous occasions.

Last summer, it was announced she would run for sheriff at Cambridge on the Republican ticket in the 1923 elections. "Miss" Andrews was prompt in her denials, but later she admitted she had had the intention, abandoning it because of her family's objections.

While this rumor was circulating, people recalled her youthful exploit as an avenging angel and predicted two things: That all the most notable crooks in the New World would come flocking to Cambridge, and that they would not get away, not even if they tried.

She was driving through Cambridge the night in question. The sheriff was standing desolately in the road, watching the tail light of a car ahead that was rapidly dimming.

"There he goes," lamented the sheriff.

"Let's get after him," said Miss Andrews.

AUDITORS SEEKING D.C. FUNDS REPORT

$5,000,000 in Treasury and Claimed by District Not Yet Found, They Say.

Progress of the auditors, engaged to determine whether the Federal Government is indebted to the District government for $5,000,000, was reported to the Joint Congressional Committee on Fiscal Relations yesterday.

The auditors announced they have not completed their audit but expect to have the results in the hands of the committee by December 20 or January 1. So far, the progress had been slow and the audit was not sufficiently advanced to indicate anything definite, it was explained.

The entire committee was present: Senator Lawrence C. Phipps, chairman; Senator L. Heister Ball, Delaware, and Senator William J. Harris, Georgia, representing the Senate, and Representatives Robert E. Evans, Nebraska; William C. Wright, Georgia, and Guy Hugh Hardy, the House, Maj. Daniel Donovan, District Auditor, represented the District.

Past and future work of the District chapter, American Red Cross, was endorsed by the police and fire departments yesterday with the enrollment of every member. Final report was made to Mrs. John Alban Dougherty, manager of the Washington division, closing the most successful campaign in the two divisions.

WIFE MAY SUCCEED LATE REP. NOLAN

Would Carry on Policies for Balance of His Term, She Says.

By Universal Service.
SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 1.—To carry on the humanitarian work started by John I. Nolan, his widow, Mrs. Mae Hunt Nolan, will be a candidate to succeed him for the term to Congress from the Fifth California district to which he was elected on his death bed.

"I ask that I may carry on his work to the end of the term to which, although dying, he was elected," Mrs. Nolan said today. "It is a duty I owe to him to offer to carry out his plans as he would have done had he lived," she said.

Representative Nolan, one of the leading labor leaders of the Pacific coast and long a figure of importance in Congress because of this fact, was particularly interested in a bill he had introduced providing a minimum wage of $3 a day for Government employees. Mrs. Nolan, who married him in 1915, served as his private secretary and adviser and was familiar with his policies.

Mrs. Nolan probably will have the support of labor. She has already been endorsed by the molders' union, of which Nolan for many years was a national officer. The campaign committee of the Union Labor party will meet with a convention of union delegates tomorrow, when Mrs. Nolan's unanimous endorsement is expected.

Several candidates have already announced withdrawal upon learning that Mrs. Nolan would consent to succeed her husband. Nolan was elected without opposition.
